BASIC PICKLEBALL RULES

The server starts the game from the right side of the court, serving underarm to the opposite receiver box on the other side.

The ball must clear the no volley zone line and must bounce once before the receiver can return the ball back across the net.

The highlighted section is called the 'non-volley zone'. A player cannot hit the ball while in the zone unless it bounces there first.

The return of serve can land anywhere within the serving team's court. The serving team must also let the ball bounce once.

After this, the play is much like badminton, but you may hit the ball either in the air or after a bounce (excluding non-volley zone).

In doubles, each player gets to serve. If the serving side scores a point, the server switches sides with his partner.

If the server loses the point, he loses his serve and it passes to his partner, serving from whichever position he is in.

After the second player loses his serve, the service goes to the opponents, both of whom will get to serve.
